The Centre for Criminal Justice Studies

The Centre for Criminal Justice Studies (CCJS) is an interdisciplinary research institute located within the School of Law, University of Leeds. The Centre was established in 1987 to pursue research into criminal justice systems and criminological issues. It has since grown to become one of the leading criminological Centres of its kind with an established international profile.

Our Research

The Centre excels in the production of research that is empirically rich, conceptually sophisticated and policy relevant. Research is interdisciplinary and often comparative in its insights to certain key criminal justice issues. From the outset, the Centre has set scholarly agendas, producing ground-breaking, research with national and international relevance. It has made major contributions to the fields of counter-terrorism, criminal law, cybercrime and security, human rights and miscarriages of justice, offender management and resettlement, policing, urban security, restorative justice, urban security, victim studies, and youth justice. As the Centre has expanded so too have its research strengths, to encompass crime prevention, historical criminology, international and comparative criminal law and criminal justice, quantitative criminology, and transnational policing and security.

- Behavioural Regulation and Social Order
- Criminal Justice Processes
- Historical Criminology
- International, Comparative and Transnational Criminal Justice
- Policing Security and Governance
- Technologies, Crime and Justice

Our Staff

Staff have strengths in: criminology, criminal justice and criminal law and procedure, combining commitments to quantitative and qualitative methods in empirical research, as well as socio-legal analysis. Our staff have conducted research for a range of key external funding bodies including: the ESRC, Nuffield Foundation, Joseph Rowntree Foundation, Leverhulme Trust, Home Office, Youth Justice Board, Lord Chancellor's Department, National Probation Service, European Commission and others. Such projects sustain the established profile of the Centre as a preeminent research unit, but also ensure that our teaching is at the cutting-edge of contemporary academic and policy debates.

Why study with us?

The Centre runs both undergraduate and postgraduate courses in criminal justice studies and criminology and has a large and vibrant research student population. The quality of the research-led teaching is widely recognised and welcomed by employers.
