invite you to the seminar and exhibition:

Arts-based research with young people for literacies learning in US & UK

Wednesday 8th April 2020

2-4pm

Liberty Building SR G.33

With guest speakers

Dr James Chisholm, University of Louisville, USA

Dr Jessica Bradley, University of Sheffield, UK

This seminar will showcase co-produced arts-based approaches to researching languages and literacies with young people in the US and UK, and invite discussion around the implications for educational and social inclusion. The ICY: Inclusion, Childhood and Youth Centre brings together experts in interdisciplinary childhood and youth studies, with a particular focus on inclusivity and equality. As part of this focus, the Centre is currently engaged in exploring and discussing how to do research, co-production and intervention work with children and young people who may feel excluded by classic research methodologies. The AILA Creative Inquiry and Applied Linguistics Research Network is an international network of applied linguists and artists researching the affordances of arts-based inquiry for understandings and enhancing communication and social justice. Light refreshments will be available. Please feel welcome to share this with interested colleagues. This will be a fully accessible event and participation is free of charge.
